ABOUT YELLOW DOG BLUES

One morning Bo Willie finds the doghouse empty and the gate wide open! Farmer Fred says Yellow Dog hit Highway 61 and started running. Aunt Jessie picks up Bo Willie in her pink Cadillac, and together they look for his missing puppy love. Their search leads them from juke joints to tamale stands to streets ringing with the music of B.B. King and Muddy Waters. Where, where did that Yellow Dog go?

Acclaimed creators Alice Faye Duncan and Chris Raschka present a boogie-woogie journey along the Mississippi Blues Trail. With swinging free verse and stunning hand-stitched art, Yellow Dog Blues is a soulful fable about what happens when the blues grabs you and holds on tight.

ABOUT THE BLUES

The blues is a musical genre born in the Deep South of the United States, specifically Northwest Mississippi, in the Delta region in the late 1800s. The genre was created by Black Americans (many of whom were enslaved), and its roots are in work songs, spirituals, and ragtime. Many blues songs have soulful lyrics with themes of injustice, loneliness, loss, and suffering.

The blues spread from Mississippi to other places around the South, including Georgia, Louisiana, Tennessee, and Texas, and became popular in the early 1900s. The jazz musicians of New Orleans were especially influenced by the blues, and — because of the Great Migration from 1910–1940 — it eventually traveled to Northern and Midwestern cities like Chicago, Detroit, and New York.

The most famous blues musicians include Buddy Guy, John Lee Hooker, Robert Johnson, B.B. King, Koko Taylor, Big Mama Thornton, Muddy Waters, and Howlin' Wolf. But if you think you don't know blues music, think again! You hear it every day in the rock, soul, and jazz songs on the radio and popular streaming services — from performers like the Beatles, Eric Clapton, and Tina Turner to Beyonce, Lady Gaga, and Olivia Rodrigo.

WRITE YOUR OWN BLUES SONG

Blues music is all about expressing feelings, many times feelings of sadness. For you, that could mean having to do homework or getting grounded for not completing your chores to, yes, losing your beloved family dog. Keep in mind that blues music can talk about good times, too!

Let's get started.

1. Pick your theme — what is something that makes you sad, mad, or even glad?
2. What are 3-4 things about that problem or plight that really get you going?
3. Now, write! Here's an easy fill-in-the-blank song to get your blues writing skills in motion.

ABOUT CHRIS RASCHKA'S ART

Award-winning illustrator Chris Raschka is best known for his vivid, playful, often soulful watercolors. But for Yellow Dog Blues, he used a new, unique approach — paint, fabric, and embroidery!

Chris began by sourcing raw recycled canvas from FabScrap, a 501(c)3 charitable organization that makes available materials that might have gone straight in the trash. He painted the artwork directly on the canvas, then layered embroidery on top.

This recent article from A Fuse #8 Production by children's librarian Betsy Bird offers more background on the book's creation and Chris's art process.

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

- Blues music grew out of Black Americans' desire for joyful, soul-stirring music for times of both celebration and mourning. Why do you think people are drawn to sad songs? Can you think of any times that a sad song might comfort someone more than a happy song?
- Look up Clarksdale, Cleveland, Dockery, Memphis, and Merigold on a map of Mississippi. Draw a line from place to place to trace Bo Willie's trip. How many total miles was his trip? How long would it take to drive his route?
- Do you have a dog or other beloved pet? How would you feel if they ran away? What would you do to track them down?
- Do you think Yellow Dog will ever return to Bo Willie's house? Why or why not? How do you think Bo Willie would answer that question?
- Check out some of Alice Faye Duncan's and Chris Raschka's other books from the library and compare their plotlines, focuses, and illustrations to Yellow Dog Blues. How are they similar? How are they different?
